Is it possible for the United States to break up?

by Fred Reed (from The Unz Review: <http://www.unz.com/freed/how-long-america/> )

Three major racial blocs eye each other with fear and hostility. The hard left controls the media and the government against the desires of much of the country, enforcing social engineering that is deeply disliked. Feminists make war on men, and destroy the schools and universities. Washington is widely loathed. Rules, laws, and regulations never voted upon grow ever more burdensome and intrusive. Many quietly want out. The question is how to get there. Even those mean old Republicans are dominated by the business wing (that means Jeb Bush); and the well funded Jeb Bush crowd goes right along with the "Culture Wars" rot. (For cheap Mexican labor) Who might like to secede? Most conspicuously, Latinos. In four states—California, Texas, Arizona, and New Mexico—Latinos either have or will soon have a demographic majority. This doesn't mean that White and Brown will be locked in mortal political combat. It means that Hispanic influence, already potent, will become more so. It does mean that Latinos, like Blacks, will clump together in such numbers and concentrations that they will have little contact with Whites and little incentive to assimilate. Why would they? They like their own food, music, and culture. What they want in America is our prosperity. (Especially the welfare and infrastructure)

Hispanics have more in common with Mexico than with Washington. Whites in many Western states have little in common with Washington and the Northeast. (that means the Chattering Class on New York TV) Now, here things become interesting: Illegal immigration is supported by a Mulatto President and Attorney General, from their long standing racial hostility to Whites. By executive orders even, they are doing all they can to increase the Hispanic population of the US. "For the Children" of course; and "Where is your Compassion?"

The consequence, now inevitable, is that the Southwest will become more Mexican than American. The larger a minority population, the harder to make it do things it doesn't want to do. California now issues driver's licenses to illegals. The police are not allowed to ask about status of immigration. These and similar measures come close to making them citizens of California, while not of America. The drip-by-drop empowerment of Latinos advances apace. The September 20, 2013 New York Times: "LOS ANGELES-- California is challenging the historic status of American citizenship with measures to permit noncitizens to sit on juries; vote; and to open the practice of law even to those here illegally. Also included are granting drivers' licenses and favorable in-state tuition rates to illegal immigrants..."

In case you haven't figured it out, "Diversity" is only for White people, no one else...

In recent past the rock-solid unity of the United States existed because the people wanted it. The foundation was a largely uniform White, Christian, European culture which no one thought about because there was no reason to think about it. Minorities were minor enough that they had to conform to the dominant culture. People shared ideas of morality, education, crime, music, religion, dress, manners, and patriotism. That unity is gone forever. The old, functioning system has been replaced, not by another functioning system, such as that of Japan, China, or Korea, but by civilizational chaos (called Entropy). A law of human behavior is that people want to live among people like themselves and sure don't like being told they cannot.

Another possibility of secession lies in the South. Mississippi, the darkest state, is thirty-seven percent Black. Should the Black percentage in Mississippi grow to a tipping point, then, when the Whites bail out (which is usually what happens though we are not supposed to say it); the state would become a self-governing country within a country— dependent upon federal subsidies, certainly; but having only small loyalty or culture in common with White society. (Except of course for those Southeastern Conference, SEC, football and basketball players)

Yep!
